

The Bengal tiger is the most numerous tiger species and is known for its powerful physique and beautiful striped coat.

Asian elephants are smaller than their African counterparts and are highly revered in many Asian cultures.

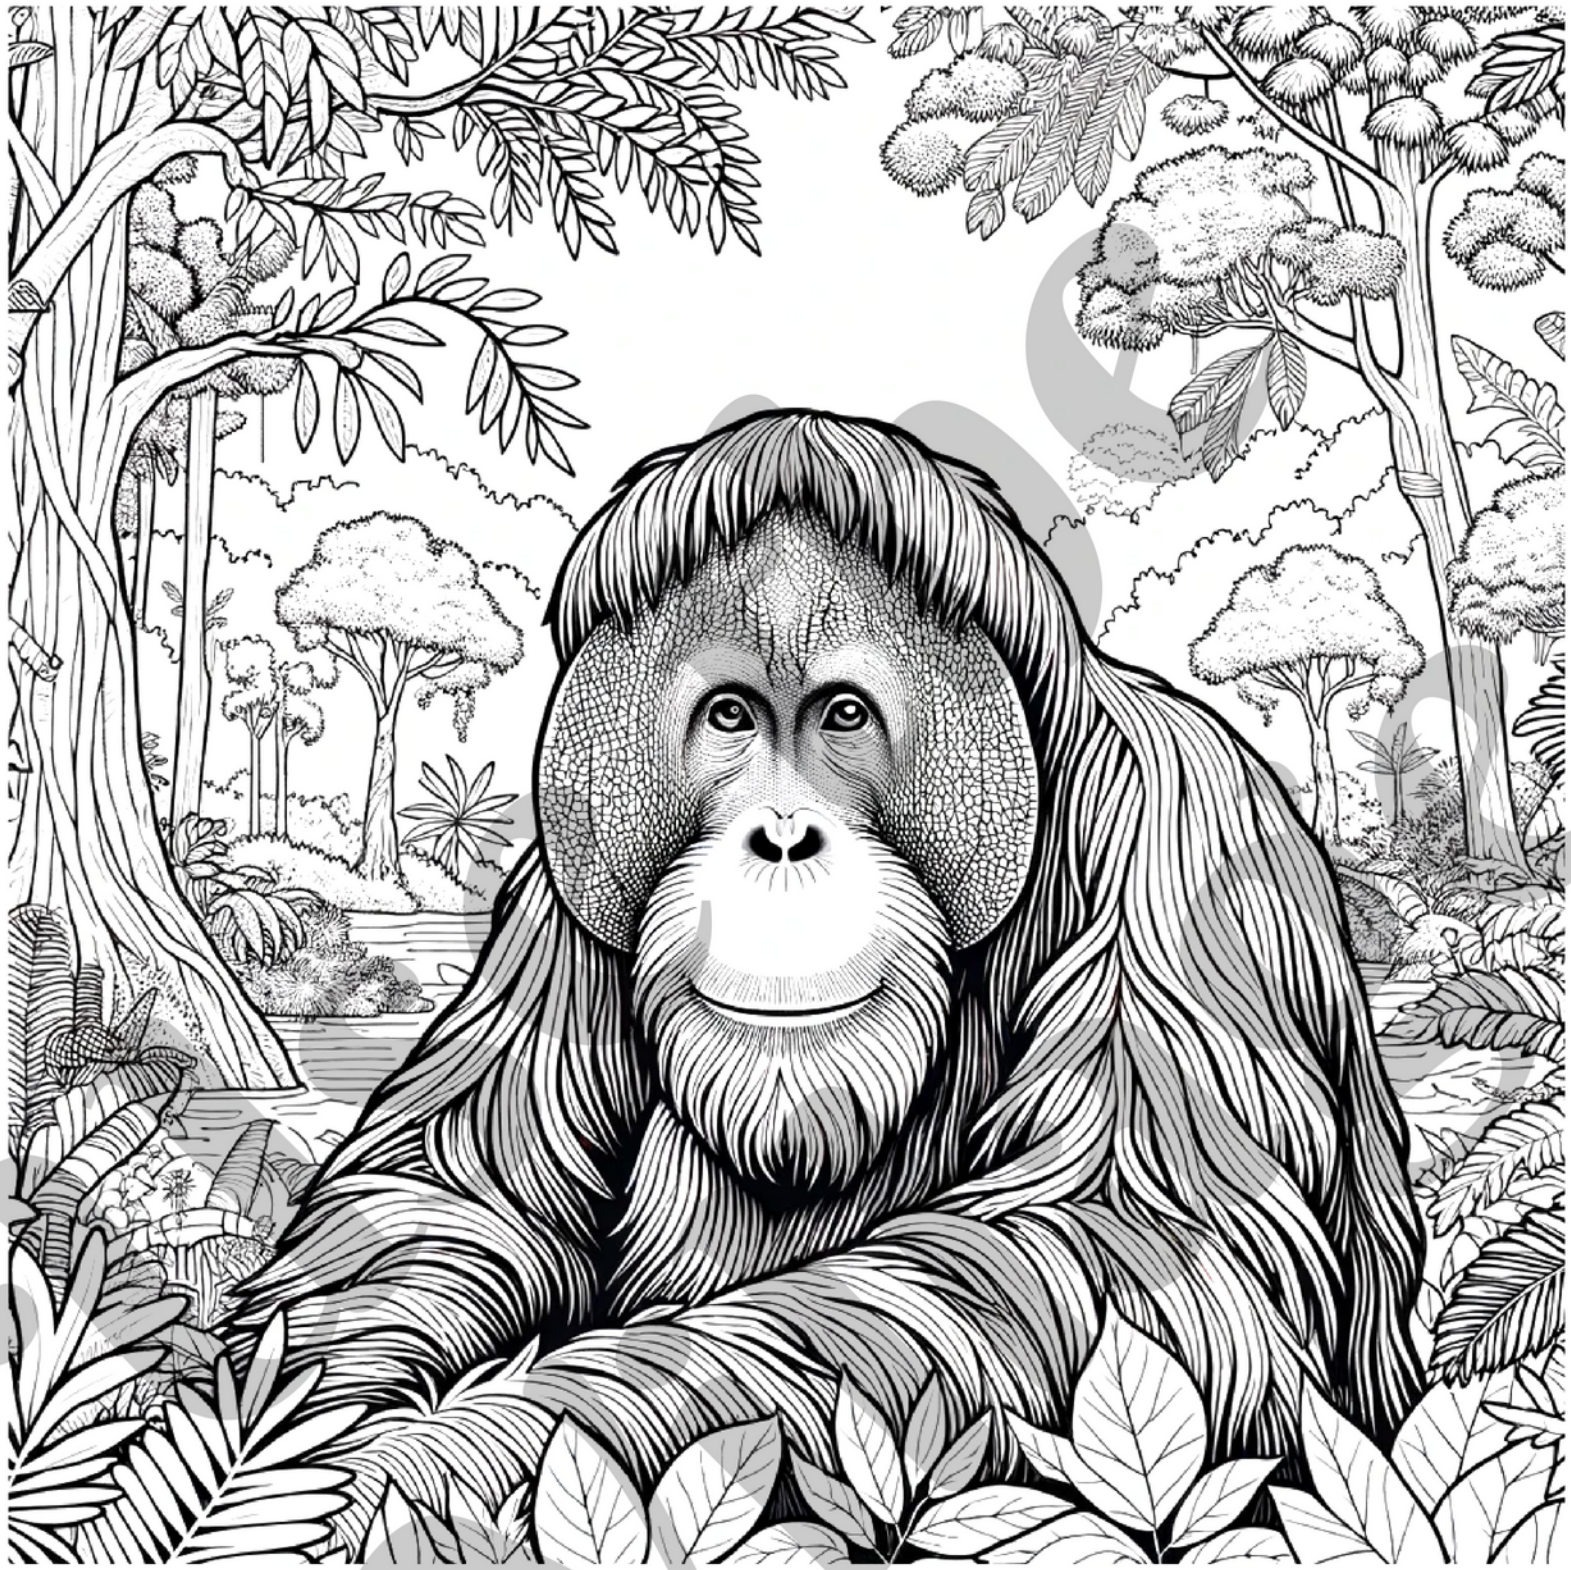

Snow leopards are known for their elusive nature and their thick fur, which is perfectly adapted to the cold, mountainous environments they inhabit.

Red pandas are small tree-dwelling mammals known for their striking red fur and bushy tails, and they primarily eat bamboo.

Komodo Dragons are the largest living lizards in the world, known for their powerful build and sharp teeth.

Orangutans are known for their distinctive red fur and are highly intelligent primates, known for using a variety of sophisticated tools.

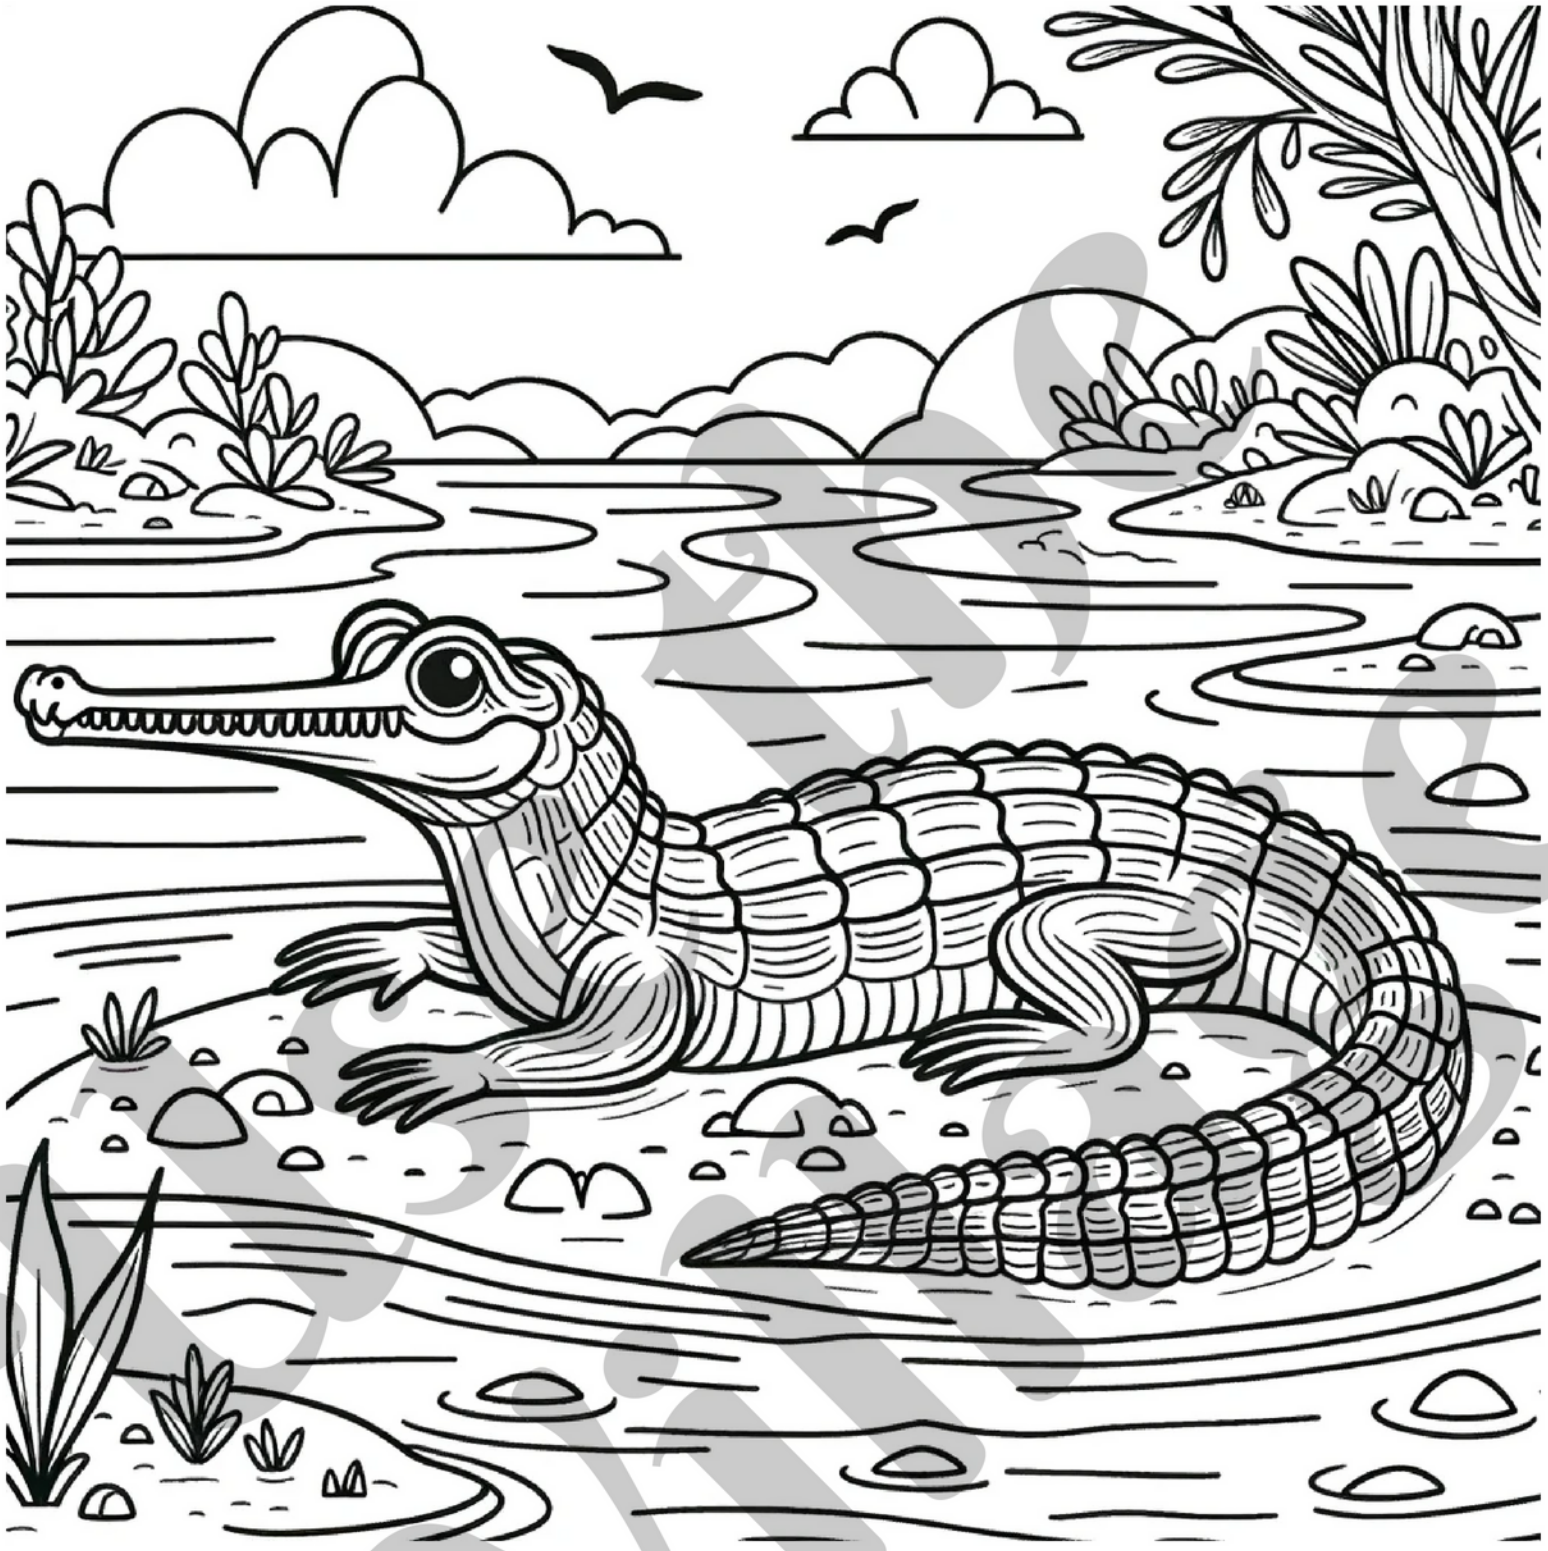

Asian Black Bears, also known as Moon Bears, are known for their distinctive white chest patch and their ability to walk short distances on their hind legs.

The King Cobra is the world's longest venomous snake, and it is revered in many Asian cultures.

Malayan Tapirs are known for their distinctive black and white coloring, which provides camouflage in the dappled light of the rainforest.

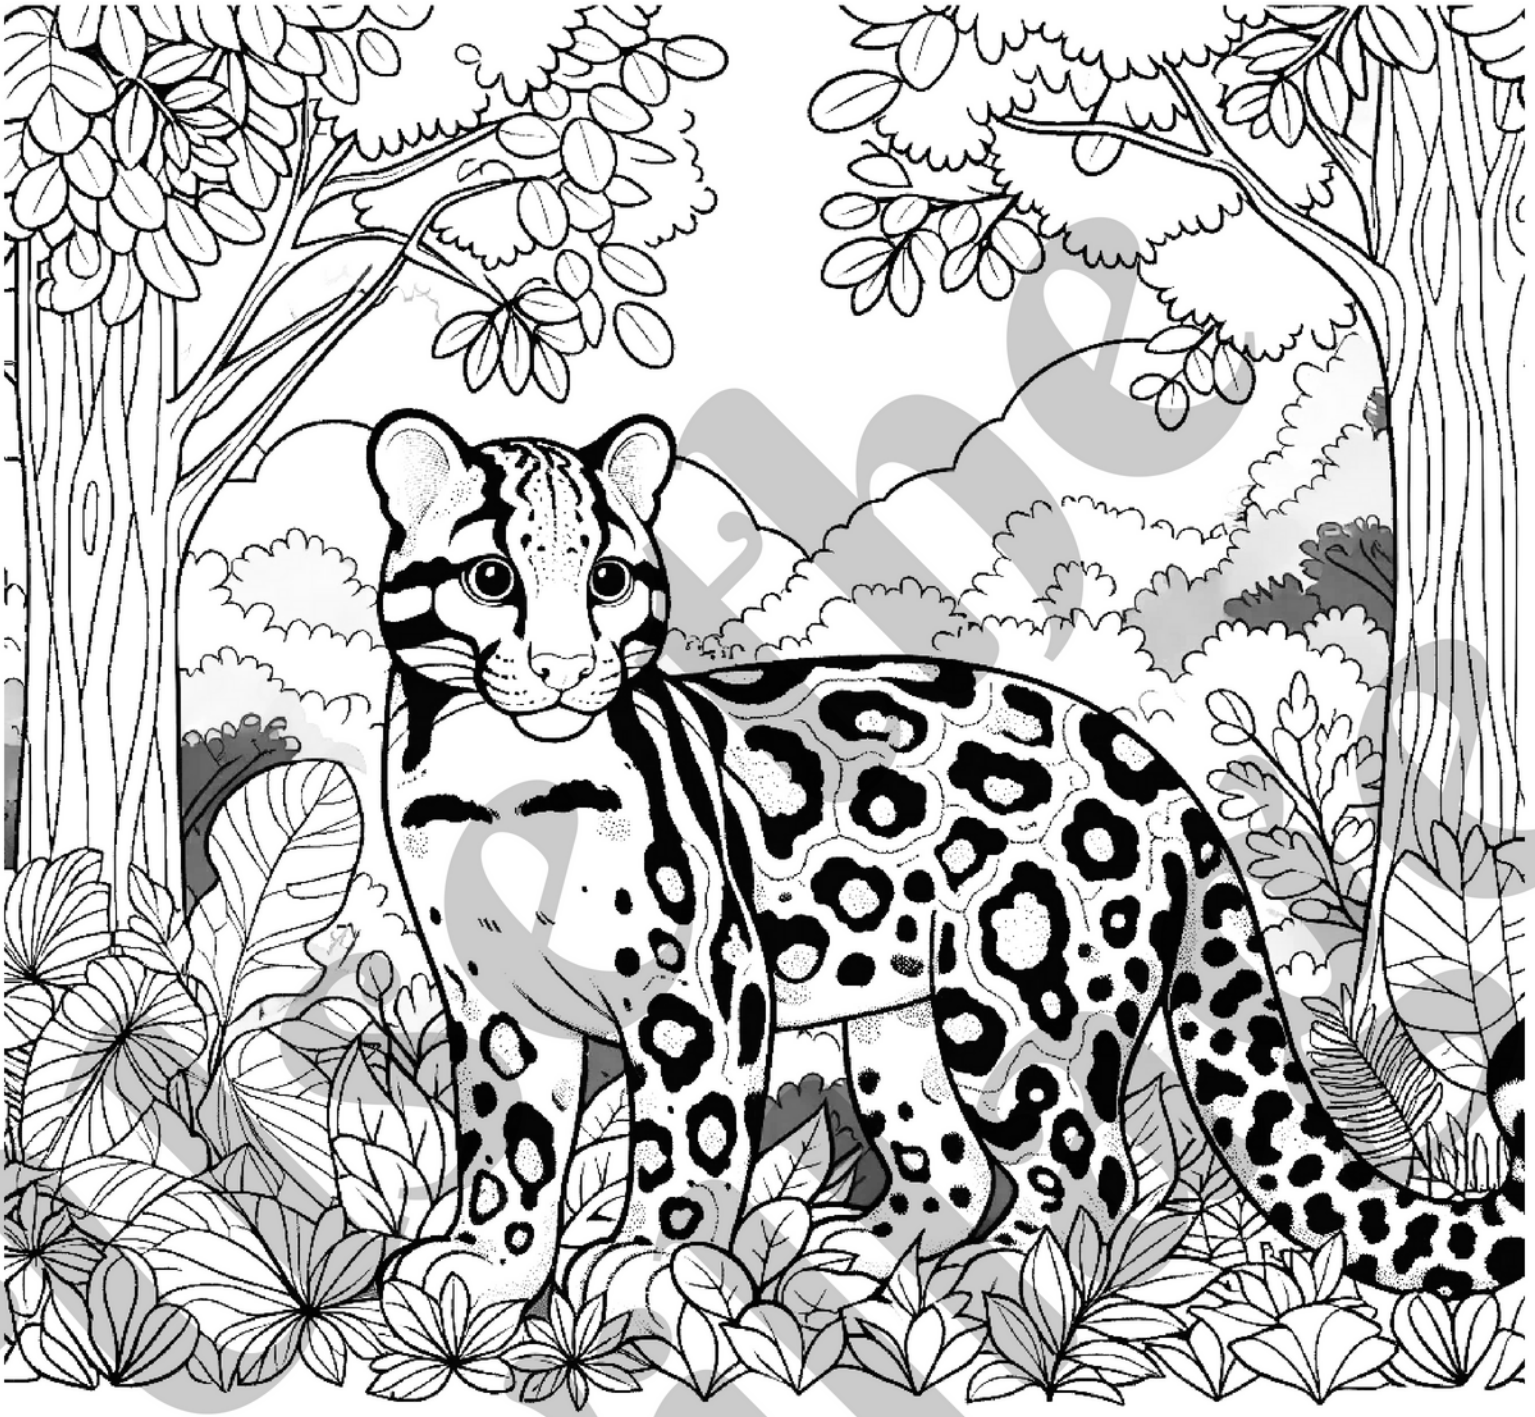

Gharials are known for their long, narrow snouts and are one of the largest species of crocodile, specializing in eating fish.

Asian Hornbills are known for their large, colorful bills and a unique feature called a casque on the top of their beaks.

The Indian Peafowl, also known as the Peacock, is famous for its vibrant, colorful feathers and the males' extravagant tail displays.

Clouded Leopards are known for their beautiful cloud-like spots on their fur and their exceptional tree-climbing ability.