Cesar Chavez (1927 - 1993) was born in Yuma, Arizona, to a family of Mexican-American farm workers. Growing up, Cesar worked in the fields with his family, experiencing the hard life of migrant farm workers. Despite having to move frequently and work long hours, he was determined to make a difference.

Cesar believed that all farm workers should be treated fairly and with respect. In 1962, he co-founded the National Farm Workers Association, which later became the United Farm Workers (UFW). He worked tirelessly to organize farm workers and fight for their rights, often leading non-violent protests and strikes.

One of Cesar's most famous actions was the Delano Grape Strike in 1965. He and the farm workers asked people to boycott grapes to pressure growers into paying better wages and improving working conditions. The strike lasted for five years and was successful in bringing about change.

Cesar Chavez also believed in the power of education and encouraged farm workers to learn about their rights and how to advocate for themselves. He often used peaceful methods like marches, fasting, and boycotts to achieve his goals.

Cesar Chavez's dedication to justice and equality made a significant impact on the lives of many farm workers. His legacy continues to inspire people to fight for workers' rights and social justice.
