Name: _____ Date: _____

MARY ANN SHADD CARY

Read the biographical passage about Mary Ann Shadd Cary and answer the questions.

Mary Ann Shadd Cary (1823 – 1893) was an incredible trailblazer who made a big difference in American history. She was born in Wilmington, Delaware, to parents who were free African Americans. Growing up, Mary Ann's family strongly believed in ending slavery and making sure everyone was treated fairly.

Mary Ann did something amazing – she became the first African American woman to write and edit a newspaper in North America! Her newspaper, called the "Provincial Freeman," talked about stopping slavery and encouraged African Americans to move to Canada for a better life.

But Mary Ann didn't stop there. She loved teaching and started a school for African American children in Canada to help them learn and grow. She also fought for women's rights, making sure that women could vote and have a say in important decisions.

Later in her life, Mary Ann Shadd Cary became a lawyer, which was a big deal because she was one of the first African American women to do so. She worked hard to make sure everyone had equal rights and opportunities.
Mary Ann Shadd Cary is a hero who paved the way for fairness and equality. Her bravery and determination inspire us all to stand up for what's right.

Use the Village

Name: _____ Date: _____

1 Where was Mary Ann Shadd Cary born, and what did her family believe in?

2 What made Mary Ann Shadd Cary special in the world of newspapers, and what was the name of her newspaper?

3 What was the significant milestone Mary Ann Shadd Cary achieved later in her life?

Use the Village